

One day online International Conference on

Spillover Effects of COVID-19 on Global Economies- Problems and Prospects

On 27.05.2020

Organised by Center for Development Economics Studies (CDES)

The countries of the World have been battling to contain the Noncommunicable Diseases (NCD) which account for 63 percent of death globally. Its epicenter is low and middle income countries as the death toll is 80 percent of total NCD deaths in these countries. Adding to this COVID-19 a new virus has attacked the human beings worldwide and dumbfounded all of us as we are not exposed to it earlier. The WHO has declared it as a Public Health Emergency of International Concern and declared this disease as pandemic on March 11, 2020. The WHO has given several guidelines to be followed by all the countries to combat its spread. However, it has entered into many countries, killed 2,83,271 people and 40,98,018 people of confirmed cases as of 12.05.2020.

The countries like India where there is pre-existing NCDs numbering more than 1.3 billion people with diabetes and hypertension are more vulnerable to this pandemic disease. It is prevalent in the other EMDEs also with similar health situation. Further, Advanced Economies are also severely affected by this COVID-19. The effect is severe according to the demographic profile health education level of a country. The persistent transformational impacts on economic, health, social, psychological, geopolitical etc., are the issues of concern for all the countries. The pandemic requires international coordination and cooperation in combating with the virus uniformly to save the innocent people.
